

Insulating Liner Gloves

As cold weather approaches, I am seeing more requests for customers wanting “insulated cut gloves”. While we indeed have a “few” options to consider in our offerings, I am a really big fan of double gloving in this type of scenario, using an Insulating Liner Glove. Just remember, you might have to go up one size when selecting a cut glove to go over it. These gloves are also great to put under leather, mechanics, disposable, and chemical resistant type gloves:

Liner gloves are a “one size fits all” (very stretch) and use specialty fibers to wick moisture away from your skin, leaving your hands both dry and warm. Only men with extremely big hands find these gloves are a little too snug. Laundering them is also no problem (I have a pair that I have been using for over 10 years!). These gloves should never be used alone (very slipper, especially when using a steering wheel) but you now have hundreds of glove options to put over them!
